PETS UNDER 6 YEARS OF AGE

Before any pet is put under general anesthesia, the doctor will do a thorough examination (nose to toes); however, the doctor is limited in what they can feel in this physical exam. The pre-anesthetic blood panel gives him or her a peek inside, allowing him or her to check your pet's red blood cells, and various organ functions, to be sure he or she are able to remove the anesthetic agents from your pet's body after surgery for a smooth recovery. This test assists the doctor in determining the appropriate anesthetic drugs for your pet.

I approve the bloodwork : _____ (initial)

I decline the bloodwork : _____ (initial)

(I understand that by declining the bloodwork, I may be compromising the health of my pet, which may result in death.)

PETS OVER 6 YEARS OF AGE, OR SICK PETS

For our "senior" pets undergoing surgery, we recommend a general blood screening panel. A general blood panel consists of a full organ workup, a total protein, and red blood cell evaluation. These results are important as our pets get older to make anesthesia as safe as possible. If abnormalities are detected, the doctor may recommend further testing, special monitoring during and after the procedure, and/or postponing the surgery at this time.
